Transforming Health Care Through Nursing Innovations: Lessons Learned

Diana J. Mason, PhD, RN, FAAN, DHL (Hon.)

9 am, Friday, November 14, 2014
Signe Skott Cooper Hall
University of Wisconsin-Madison
We are honored to welcome Diana J. Mason as the 2014 Littlefield Leadership Lecturer. She is president of the American Academy of Nursing and the Rudin Professor of Nursing at Hunter College-Bellevue School of Nursing of the City University of New York, where she directs the Center for Health, Media, and Policy.

Dr. Mason will discuss opportunities and challenges of innovators in health care, particularly among nursing innovators, or “edge runners,” who develop care models and interventions demonstrating significant, sustained clinical and financial outcomes. She will also explore how nursing can lead, in partnership with other health care professions, to improve the patient’s experience of care and the health of populations while reducing the per capita cost of health care.
